

A changing world

Written by Pedro Meyer

After three months of traveling around the world, I find myself sitting on board of the plane on the last leg of the journey from Frankfurt to Mexico City.

This has been a trip that has taken me to many parts of the world, different cultures, and an immense array of visions. I have learned how much we are all alike and then also how different we really are from one country to the other. However, the issues of globalization are certainly a reality that will not be changing course, on the contrary, I think it will increase at an ever faster pace, notwithstanding all the concerns that are expressed all over the world. We are told that our worldly realities, as we know them today, are going to change more over the next ten years, than they did over the past one hundred years. I read this over the Internet, directly from a seat on board the airplane, and I send an e-mail to a friend commenting on the above.
